1. REAL-ESTATE

- Sri Lanka govt construction firms get first 'Megapolis' contracts

Sri Lankan government construction firms will get the first contracts for selected projects under the new 'Megapolis' plan covering the Colombo metropolitan region but through competitive bids, a government spokesman said.

Health minister Rajitha Senarathne said the 'Megapolis' town development program will address major issues like traffic congestion, parking and road safety that arose owing to haphazard development.

Initial projects for developing important towns in the Western Province, where Colombo is located, are to be done at a cost of six billion rupees this year, he told a news conference.

- Being culturally rich

Ceylon Finance Today: A culturally rich nation can truly call themselves a wholesome nation, Chairman and Founder of Fairway Holdings Hemaka de Alwis said on Friday (15th).

"Lots of people ask the question how come Fairway is in to sponsoring so many arts and culture related events? There is a very good explanation for this. I believe that we as a nation have been deprived of arts and culture in many ways due to peace not prevailing in the country over a very long time period," he said.

- US$ 12,000 per capita target by 2030 – Ranawaka

The previous government has invested over US$ 6 billion in an ad-hoc manner in the last seven years for projects in Hambantota, Megalopolis and Western Development Minister Champika Ranawaka said yesterday.

He said that had this money been put into development of a project like the Megalopolis, it would have been more productive.

Speaking at the Sri Lanka Chamber of Commerce' Italian Business Council event on opportunities from the Colombo Megalopolis development project, he said the project which was planned in 2002 was unsuccessful since environmental constraints were not looked into and it lacked proper zonal planning.

- $44b mega funding for Megapolis

The first phase of the Government's flagship project, Western Province Megapolis, will be unveiled later this month and require an impressive investment of $44 billion.

Megapolis and Western Development Minister Champika Ranawaka said the Government is also planning key road shows in Japan, Germany, India, China and Singapore to attract investors to the project.

Western Megapolis is Sri Lanka's grand strategy to propel the country's brand to achieve the status of a high income developed nation by 2030, he noted.

"In Sri Lanka the Government is investing about $30-$35 billion per annum and our target is $44 billion for the next five years," Ranawaka said making a presentation on 'The Vision of Megapolis and Investment Opportunities' organised by the Sri Lanka-Italy Business Council of the Ceylon Chamber of Commerce in Colombo yesterday.

- Australian firms seek policy consistency to invest in Sri Lanka

Australian companies are keen to invest in Sri Lanka but need more consistency in economic policy and regulations, Tim Huggins, deputy high commissioner for Australia in Sri Lanka, said.

"Plenty of Australian companies are interested in investing and trading in Sri Lanka," he told the annual general meeting of the National Chamber of Exporters.

"But they need more consistency in policies. If you're investing with a 20-year timeline, you need to be reassured of regulatory consistency and that the rules remain the same over this period."

- Sri Lanka Krrish deal tax breaks to be lowered

A mixed development project by India's Krrish group which ran into a controversy during the last regime can still go ahead but as a new project with tax incentives revised lower, an official said.

"It came as a strategic investment that required certain undertakings from their part," Director General of Sri Lanka's Board of Investment, Duminda Ariyasinghe told reporters.

"Obviously some of them haven't been met. We are revising downwards the incentives that we offer."

- 'Green' or concrete city?

The photoshopped advertisements put out by the Port City Company suggest a typical concrete maze that will impact the citizens of Colombo, by affecting the air quality with construction debris for many years.

It also transpires that there are no concrete plans for water supply, garbage disposal and power supply except to rely on the Government of Sri Lanka to supply these. Given the problems that Colombo is having dealing with these issues at the moment, what price will the citizens of Colombo have to pay to realize the dream of someone with no idea nor interest in the citizens of Colombo city? While the debate rages, there is a ray of light in the report produced for the Prime Minister by the Megapolis Ministry.
